How can the verbs to do and to go be used to form compound verb tenses?

The verbs "to do" and "to go" are auxiliary verbs that can be used to form compound verb tenses, primarily in English. Here's how each verb can be used:

Using "To Do" to Form Compound Verb Tenses

1. Emphatic Tense:

- Used to emphasize an action or to form negative sentences and questions in the simple present and simple past.
- Example:
 - Present: I do study every day.
 - Past: She did finish her homework.

2. Questions:

- In the simple present and simple past, "do" is used to form questions.
- Example:
 - Present: Do you like ice cream?

- Past: Did he go to the store?

3. Negatives:

- "Do" is used to form negative sentences in the simple present and simple past.
- Example:
 - Present: I do not (don't) like broccoli.
 - Past: She did not (didn't) see the movie.

Using "To Go" to Form Compound Verb Tenses

1. Future Intentions:

- "Going to" is used to express future intentions or plans.
- Example:
 - I am going to visit my grandmother tomorrow.
 - They are going to start a new project next week.

2. Present Continuous for Future Plans:

- The present continuous tense with "go" is also used to indicate future plans or arrangements.
- Example:
 - We are going to the movies tonight.
 - She is going to a conference next month.

3. Phrasal Verbs:

- "Go" can be part of phrasal verbs which have different meanings.
- Example:

- Go on (continue): Please go on with your story.
- Go out (leave): They go out every Friday night.

These verbs are essential in constructing various tenses and expressing nuances in English. Understanding their roles can greatly enhance your grasp of English grammar and sentence structure.
